Where nature needs us most

Who we are

Biome Conservation (ICFC) is a highly rated, award-winning Canadian charity that funds front-line conservation by local organizations and Indigenous peoples in the tropics and other priority areas in lower-income countries. This is where biodiversity is richest, most under threat, and where dollars go furthest.

Our Mission

To protect and restore nature by partnering with local organizations and Indigenous groups in regions where biodiversity is richest and most under threat.

What we do

-  Conserve large, critical ecosystems.
-  Protect marine and freshwater resources.
-  Support threatened species recovery.
-  Establish and protect climate corridors and support ecosystem resilience.
-  Engage and empower local communities and Indigenous peoples.

Why it matters

The tropics are where nature is most imperiled.

Conservation dollars have the greatest impact here.

Biodiversity loss and climate change are interconnected global crises.
